Thanks to SF Legal for Housing Mega-Sized Databases

When working on an antitrust case, selecting a litigation support partner is a crucial decision. The legal back-and-forth could go on for years – and having a solid team assembled could make all the difference. Just consider our client representing an international technology company. For nearly a year, SF Legal worked closely with this mid-sized firm to convert data, including email and other computer files, as well as scan box after box of documents. In many cases, conversion was done as depositions were ongoing – all in a rush environment.

In addition, the law firm entrusted SF Legal to maintain two databases – a 1.3-million-page database for themselves, as well as a 700,000-page database of opposing counsel's production. SF Legal routinely constructed searches to assist the case team with ongoing deposition preparation. This stamp of approval gave SF Legal the "green light" to play an ongoing, integral role in their data review process, while consistently delivering services with quick turnaround and on-the-dime responsiveness.

"It is not uncommon for our clients to rely on our services for years while they resolve a single matter that involves masses of data. This approach results in a true partnership. In addition, SF Legal gains a clear understanding of the case and the client, and, as a result, is able to jump in at any time to provide additional services or change direction.
